PRESENTED BY

Pierre-André Chiappori

Columbia University

A graduate from Ecole Normale Supérieure, agrégé in mathematics, PhD in economics, Pierre-André Chiappori has been a Directeur de Recherches (Senior Researcher) at the French National Research Center and a Professor at ENSAE from 1991 to 1997. Between 1992 and 1997, he was in charge of one of the first three Chaires d'économie de l'assurance (Chairs in Insurance Economics) created by the French Federation of Insurance Companies. He then became a Professor at the Department of Economics of the University of Chicago and an editor of the Journal of Political Economy. He is currently the E. Rowan and Barbara Steinschneider Professor of Economics at Columbia University (New York).

A Fellow of the Econometric Society, the European Economic Association and a Corresponding Member of the French Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, Pierre-André Chiappori is the author of more than one hundred articles published in international journals and in collective books. He is also the author of five books, among which Risque et Assurance (Flammarion), which was awarded in 1997 the CHEA Prize of the best book on insurance, Insurance: Theoretical Analysis and Policy Implications (MIT Press, co-edited with Christian Gollier), which has been awarded by the American Risk and Insurance Association the 2008 Kulp-Wright Book Award of Best Book on Risk and Insurance, and Economics of the Family, (Cambridge University Press, 2014, co-authored with M. Browning and Y. Weiss).

In 2010, Pierre-André Chiappori was awarded the Grand Prix Zerilli Marimo by the French Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques.
